

Extra: Welcome Class of '65

Welcome

The chorus of greetings to freshmen grows louder with Bulletin's refrain: We heartily welcome the Class of 1965.

A new generation has now been initiated into the peculiar community of the university student. It is fallacious to select any one period in the life of a human being and designate that period as a most important or most decisive one. The educational process does not stop at any one time. Despite this, the next four years, spent as an undergraduate, have a vital role in determining what effects all future educational experiences will have on the individual.

Education is necessarily a reciprocal process. The student is classically forced to play the role of receiver, but if he remains solely in this position he dulls his own receptivity. The challenge for the student is not only to learn to receive but also to respond; to question intelligently and to comment upon the events of his time. To be a student does not mean to hibernate in blessed academic solitude for four years; rather, it is to be a probing questioner, intent on participation as well as observation.

The Class of 1965 is another link in the long chain of questioning, concerned humanity. We hope it will meet the challenge it faces; we wish it well.

Students Occupy Reid Hall; Builders Add Last Touches

Students began to move into Helen Reid Hall, Barnard's new 8-story dormitory yesterday. The 150 occupants will be roughing it for several weeks, because there is still much finishing off to be done.

The rooms are ready for occupancy. They are freshly painted, and equipped with locks and venetian blinds to insure privacy. Corridors and stairwells, however, are unfinished, and heating and ventilation will not be completely installed for several weeks.

Men Still Working

Workers putting in the plastic wall covering are proceeding from the 8th floor down, while painters are working from the 1st floor up, to avoid confusion and overlapping spheres of influence.

It was hoped that the dorm would be completely finished by October 1, but this date has been moved up to the 15. The courtyard will probably not be cleaned and graded by this later date. New York City's concrete strike slowed down progress, as did the long stretch of hot, humid weather.

The ground for Reid Hall was broken August 22, 1960, and the foundation was laid in March of the following year. The rooms

By Invitation Only...

Bulletin invites all freshmen and transfers to visit its offices any Tuesday or Thursday afternoon — Room 1, Annex. Students interested in any aspect of newspaper work are urged to visit as early as possible. A series of Bulletin lectures will begin on Monday, October 9. Times and dates of these meetings are posted on the bulletin board outside Room 1. We look forward to meeting you.

are all doubles with built in clothes closets and two windows each. Music and recreation rooms and a lounge take up the first floor. The cost of the new dorm was met by a $850,000 Federal loan and privately raised funds.

Class of '65 Represents Many Areas

This year's freshman class, consisting of 354 young women representing 30 states and five foreign countries, meets today for the first time to begin a three-day orientation program.

The class of 1965 has the largest number of resident students, 189, in the college's history. Barnard has recorded a rise in the percentage of freshmen from the Southern, Central and Western portions of the United States: 7% of the class are from the South, 8.5% from the Central United States and 5.9% from the West.

Of the remainder 3.6% of the class were born or now reside in foreign countries and 14.7% are from New England states. The majority of the class, 60.2%, is from the Middle Atlantic states area.

Over 71% of the class was graduated from public schools, and the remainder from independent schools. The foreign countries represented are El Salvador, Greece, Australia, China and Germany. One student, who was born in Hungary, is stateless, and seven are American citizens who were educated abroad.

Moses Hadas Speaks At Academic Program

Jay Professor of Greek and Latin at Columbia, Dr. Moses Hadas, will address the Barnard Class of 1965 at the academic program tomorrow at 2 p.m. in the gym. His topic for this lecture has been broadly titled "The Following the hour-long lecture, there will be discussion groups, approximately 22, led by members of the Barnard student body, according to Lee Salmonsohn '62, chairman of the academic program.

Since 1925, Professor Hadas has been teaching at Columbia. He received his B.A. degree from Emory University in Georgia, where he was born. After completing his Masters and Doctorate at Columbia University, Dr. Hadas began his instructorship and has since become one of the foremost figures in the humanities field.

Among the honors Dr. Hadas has received is the "Great Teacher Award," given by the Society of Older Graduates at Columbia. This was awarded him in 1955.

In 1959, Professor Hadas gave a series of lectures at Barnard on the ancient civilizations of Greece and Rome. He has given many talks in this field, but will not deal with it specifically in his lecture tomorrow.

Professor Hadas, who has written books on the histories of Greece and Rome, has translated and edited Greek and Latin transcript and plays, will base his talk on one of his own books, Humanism.

Advisers Interview Freshmen, Enjoy Varied Responsibilities

by Mada Levine

Since their appointments last March as advisers to the class of 1965, Dr. Tatiana Wolff Greene and Miss Jimmye Elizabeth Kimmey have been busy with both the administrative and the more personal aspects of programming

The author of prose and poetry works, Jules Supervielle, and Pierre Perdues respectively, Mrs. Greene's poems have also appeared in the University of Houston publication "Le Bayou" and in "Bulletin de la Societe des Professeurs Francais." She will and greater individual involvement.

Educated at the University of Texas from which she was graduated cum laude, Miss Kimmey received her A.M. degree from Columbia and came to Barnard in 1956. Like Dr. Greene, Miss Kimmey will continue teaching in addition to her new duties.

Her courses include lectures on International Relations—(Government 11) — and on International Organizations (Government 12). The third course Miss Kimmey will teach discusses American foreign policy (Government 20), and will be given in the spring.

Professor Greene and Miss Kimmey will each advise approximately 130 freshmen. The work is different from any either has done in the sense in that it entails counselling and guidance, enabling both to enter into more personal contact with students.

For advisory purposes, classes are divided alphabetically. Professor Greene will take care of the first half, and Miss Kimmey the second. Many of the students had been interviewed in June concerning programming. But since final programs depend on the outcome of the hygiene exemption test and the results of the language placement exam, course changes are expected to be myriad. It is then, the advisers hope, that the time of casual conversation will begin and interviewing the incoming freshman class. Yet their accomplishments are not altogether confined to the educational realm.

Professor Greene who received her A.M. and Ph.D. from Columbia University, studied previously in Brussels at the Universite de Bruxelles, and joined the Barnard faculty as a French teacher in 1946 after lecturing at Columbia University.

maintain her teaching schedule in addition to her advisory duties.

Miss Kimmey, an instructor in government at Barnard, and a member of the Admissions Committee, terms the class of '65 as "the best we've ever had," and herself as "very much impressed." She describes her new activities as an intensification of what every teacher does, but more personal because of the deeper
