Barnard Bear.

Mr. Hamilton W. Mabie addressed the members of the "Barnard Bear" and their friends on Monday, November 24th. Mr. Mabie spoke on the subject of "Books and their Writers." Following are some extracts from his address:—

"There are three types of character in fiction. First, the traveller, the leader of the larger life, the man who has seen much of the world and has done that which many others have been unable to do because of lack of opportunity. Second, the man who suffers. This is the man who has an immense capacity for suffering and whose profound interest in men is overcharged with passion. Third, the man who achieves.

"A man's work is the spiritual expression of himself. Environment has direct effect upon the man and explains him largely. Because of this he stands close to mankind.

"Great races produce great writers. Such men are the product of a deep, rich, harmonized life.

"Many people have curiosity to know how things are done. Great artists cannot explain their methods so as to show the secret of their power, because the man who gives great things to the world is never conscious of his power.

"Ease in writing is the result of forgotten toil. Absence of the suggestion of toil makes the work artistic and effective. If the pain of toil gets into the work there is a lack of spontaneity and freshness.

"The essence of style is the expression of personality. The man of genius finds the universal in himself. He has something to say and can say it simply and naturally.

"Originality does not simply mean inventiveness. Everything has been said before. But originality lies in seeing things to a rich personality. Few see things clearly. We go through the world with our senses closed. The artist points out things we have looked at but never noticed.

"Commonplaces are dealt in by the greatest writers, but the great artist is not commonplace. When things cease to be commonplace they cease to be great. The great man keeps with him the spirit of a child, and never loses the sense of the wonder and freshness of the miracle of life. He keeps his perceptions undulled.

"The great artist has an out-of-door indifference and ease. He has no concern for posterity or for critics. He possesses a creative mood with no self-consciousness.

"The secret of power in writing is approached but never discovered. It lies in the personality—the unconscious self different from others. The fundamental requisite is to keep our nature in touch with this power.

"Inspiration is not accidental. The highest inspiration is to keep in touch with something greater than we are. No genius without this loyalty to something higher. It means essential, wholesome harmony with the law of life."

An informal reception followed the address.

BARNARD COLLEGE.

Broadway & 119th Street.

COLUMBIA UNIVERSITY, N. Y.

MONDAY, DECEMBER 1, 1922.

Some correspondents of this week are strong in their disapproval of an editorial in our last issue. Probably expressing the opinions of many other students, they consider our attitude toward the action of the Mortarboard editors unfair and our view mistaken. We wish to disclaim at once all interest in the affair except as a matter of principle, and also to remove the impression that the article in question gave the opinion of a very few. It was written on the suggestion and request of a number of seniors, who had begun to doubt the wisdom of their vote to pay the tax required by the Mortarboard. Moreover, its object was by no means to deprive the editors of anything justly theirs, but rather to determine how far their right to charge for representation extends.

The main point at issue is whether the Mortarboard is a college or class publication. In its origin it is undoubtedly the former; and in its subject matter as well it is concerned with Barnard at large and not merely with any given Junior class. Contributions, moreover, are received from members of all classes. Anyone who has seen actual class books, such as that published by the Seniors at Smith, will not consider the Mortarboard anything but a college publication.

The question, then arises, if the Mortarboard is the year book of the student body of Barnard, why does not the student body bear the expense of publishing it? We answer, this is exactly what is done. Instead of undergoing a part of the responsibility and expense four times during its career in college, each class takes the entire burden once. At any given time, the Senior class has discharged its whole duty in regard to the Mortarboard. If it has been so unfortunate as not to meet the necessary expenditures, it will be expected to pay for the next year's book. Another class, if the former has been financially successful, is usually free from obligation to pay for the Mortarboard. And the same is true of Freshman classes, which have the task of publication still before them. It is not their responsibility to pay for any Mortarboard which is time for them to appear.

In the BULLETIN of November 10th we published a notice regarding the lunch room. This notice was for the benefit of those students who had complaints to make against the present arrangements, and stated that if such complaints were made in writing and deposited in a box placed on the door of the lunch room they would receive the prompt and careful attention of the officers in charge. The box was in its place at the appointed time, but after more than a fortnight the number of letters which had been deposited was only two. Of these, one was vague; it stated that students did not get the worth of their money and that the lunch room should be modelled after the one at Horace Mann. There was, however, no definite, practical suggestion offered for consideration. The second letter merely contained the suggestion that cakes of chocolate should be sold for the benefit of students who had not time to get a regular lunch. Now, neither of these letters was calculated to be particularly helpful in reorganizing the lunch room system. Yet complaints have been made among the students themselves, which seem to us just, and remedies suggested which would admit of practical application. Why have not those who found fault with the existing order of things seized this opportunity for remedying them? There can be no doubt of the sincerity of the offer of reorganization. If we had had any doubt, the prompt promise of a new locker system in reply to the request of the Undergraduate Association, would be sufficient to remove it. Moreover, a recent suggestion in regard to the regular lunch room has, to our knowledge, been immediately followed. Let us realize that we have no right to complain of defects of management when we are too careless or too indifferent to college interests to point out these defects to the responsible authorities.

Correspondence.

Although we are glad to publish letters signed by their writers, we are not responsible for the sentiments expressed. Unsigned letters will not be published.

To the Editor of the BULLETIN:

Last year, in your paper, there was an editorial which said it was fortunate that the Mortarboard paid expenses, as it was getting to be questioned whether it was wise to continue publishing an annual which almost every year entailed a heavy loss. In view of this, why is it not to the interest of the college at large that all fair means should be used to make the Mortarboard clear expenses. Columbia, and several other colleges have raised the price of their publication. This the Juniors hesitate to do, feeling that the individual expense would press more heavily upon the students than small collective charges. The increasing yearly subscriptions do not help materially, for it is well known that one dollar does not cover the expense of an individual Mortarboard. Therefore, on these considerations, it seems to me the college should make no serious objections to the policy of the Editors, M.A.P.

To the Editor of the BULLETIN:

The sentiments expressed in regard to the Mortarboard, in the last issue of this paper, are shared by a large number of students, and there is much to be said against the present policy of the editors of the Junior annual.

Nevertheless, there is another side to the question. If, as the editorial spoken of says, it is the duty of the Junior Class to edit a college annual, then the college ought to bear a share of the burden. The expense of purchasing the Mortarboard usually averages over eight hundred dollars. The paying of this amount, for the sake of the college, is certainly a heavier burden than one small class ought to bear exclusively.

As the college grows larger the increased number of subscriptions does not pay for the greater expense of getting out a larger and, therefore, more representative annual.

On the other hand, if the Mortarboard is purely a Junior publication and independent of the Undergraduate body as a whole, its editors have a right to regulate all the conditions of publication and the various organizations need feel no obligation to pay for representation.

An undergraduate committee could decide the question of the status of the Mortarboard in the college.

If we all agreed upon whether it was a college or a class book, there could be no further disagreements and the Juniors would work in harmony with the whole Undergraduate body.

Yours truly, E. A.

To the Editor of the BULLETIN:

In an editorial of last week's issue of the BULLETIN, it was stated that the "Mortarboard is the annual of the entire college, and not of the class that issues it." Originally a committee of Undergraduates did publish this book, but later the duty of publishing it fell to the lot of the Junior Class, and thus it has gradually developed into the Junior annual.

It is true that representation has always been given, as is customary in most class annuals, to all student organizations, but the Undergraduates have recognized the fact that such representation has been given by the Juniors in their class book. Proof of this feeling of the students was shown when the classes were asked to pay for their pages in the Mortarboard; no complaints were made to the editors, but each class immediately voted to pay the tax. If it were true, as the editorial states, that the Mortarboard is the annual of the entire college, why is it that no students, except the Juniors, elect the editors, are responsible for the contents, and, last but not least, have to meet the financial difficulties which the publication of this book presents? E.
