DEUTCHER KREIS.

There will be a meeting of the Deutscher Kreis on Wednesday, November 16th, at 4:30, in the Alumnae room.

JAPANESE FESTIVAL.

One of the prettiest entertainments that any class has given at college for the past six or eight years was the Japanese Lantern Festival given to the Class of 1908 by the Class of 1905 on Friday.

The theatre was literally besprinkled with illuminated lanterns and Japanese umbrellas. Members of the Senior Class in gorgeous and elaborate kimono entertained the Freshmen, seated on cushions around taburets on which tea and dainties were served. Part of the furnishings were kindly loaned by Ludwig Baumann.

The program included solos of the East, sung by Laura Parker, Elizabeth Boorman and Alice Smith. Perhaps the best number was the duet "Japanese Love Song." Annie Fisher, in her capital make-up, seated on two tea chests, her mechanical motions coupled with her good-humored voice, looked like an animated and decorative advertisement. Her partner, Florence Nye, made a fitting complement to the Japanese lover. However, she looked less oriental and lacked a little of the assurance to the tea-boy.

The most pretentious part of the performance was the play, "Mitsu Yu Nissi" (or, The Japanese Wedding). It is the story of a Japanese girl who, having spent her life in America, returns to her native land to find that her parents have betrothed her to one of the great men of Tokio. She, however, falls in love with the son of her fiancé, and he with her. They determine to elope, but repent of their disobedience to their parents. In the final scene the bridegroom, at the solicitation of the priest, retires in favor of his son.

Edith Dietz, as the father, while good, was not convincing. Edwina Levy, as his wife, scarcely practiced the stoic repose she was preaching to her daughter, but acted with great ease. Ethel Hendricks did not take advantage of the opportunities for a little passionate acting that the rôle of the American-bred Japanese offered her. Both good to look at and good to hear was the lover, Annie Fisher, who, together with Abigail Talbot as the father, was most convincing and earnest. The quavering voice, shaky body and realistic make-up of the old man made quite a hit during the short time he was on the stage. The Buddhist priest was the most successfully interpreted rôle, though one of the smallest. Especially when arguing with the young lover to dissuade him from his projected elopement, Sarah Hoyt managed to lend such force and seriousness to her voice that she was really impressive and almost masculine.

On the whole, the bright colors and lights, the gorgeous costumes and general Eastern atmosphere, made up for any shortcomings of the performance.

RECEPTION.

Gamma Phi Beta entertained the college on Thursday, November 10th, in honor of the visiting delegates to their convention.

MONDAY, NOVEMBER 14, 1904.

What is the Student Council supposed to do, and what is it doing? This question has been asked by many in the last few weeks, and was answered by the President of the Undergraduate Association in the meeting last Thursday. The matter seems to us of such importance that we are impelled to repeat the statement of the aims and work of the Council as given in the meeting, with some additional comment on the place the Council must occupy in the conduct of college affairs and in the estimation of the students.

It was the necessity of having some medium of communication between the Faculty and the student organizations that called the Council into existence. There had to be some definite authoritative body of students that could be held responsible by the Faculty for the controlling policy of such college affairs as were not strictly academic. The Undergraduate Association made no provision for such authority. Consequently, the Faculty Committee on Student Organizations created the Council and defined its personnel. They now hold it responsible for the management of all matters which concern the conduct of students in their college life.

The Student Council is representative of no one organization, not even of the Undergraduate Association. It is representative of the students at large. It is a little difficult at first to distinguish between the Undergraduate body as organized in the Undergraduate Association and the Undergraduate body as represented by the Student Council. We know that this distinction has not been generally recognized. But in actual working it comes out clearly. The Council is a representative number of students, but it is not in any way the creation of the Undergraduate Association. Before the Student Council, the Undergraduate Association is classified in a list that includes class organizations and societies of various sorts. As a regulator of general college policy, some of the decisions of the Council will affect only the students in certain organizations; others will affect all of the students. The Council is, therefore, in no way responsible to the Undergraduate Association any more than to any other organization.

The Student Council is essentially a deliberative body. Questions of college policy and the determination of a definite standard of college life call for serious discussion, and the members of the Council must feel the responsibility resting upon them in their decisions. With no guiding precedent, progress must be made slowly. A calendar of events should be made out, and some system given to the social life of the college. This is of urgent importance. A grade of precedence should be established that would avoid conflict between the meetings and entertainments of comparatively unimportant societies and those that are generally recognized as important.

The Student Council, then, has arisen to meet a real need felt by both Faculty and students. As controller of the student interests, it must proceed cautiously in its efforts to bring about the best possible state of things. Its decisions must be based on our experience in the past. When approved by the Faculty Committee on Student Organizations, the decisions become final. This makes it an authoritative body in determining the policy of our college life.

We count ourselves fortunate in having at last a means of preserving what we have found best for maintaining a high standard of efficiency as college students, and at the same time a means of eliminating any elements that might hinder our attainment of a high college ideal.

We trust that we have succeeded in presenting the true status of the Council, and that its importance and value will be understood and appreciated.

CORRESPONDENCE INVITED

The New York Chapter of the Daughters of the American Revolution have recently presented to Dean Gill the sum of $1,000, as a first payment on the permanent endowment of their scholarship given in the name of Mrs. Donald McLean. The scholarship is awarded, in conference with a representative of the chapter, to a student who agrees to pursue the study of history continuously throughout her college course. It is very gratifying to us that the Daughters of the American Revolution take such an interest in the advancement of our college work.

We congratulate the designer of the Sophomore play poster on her artistic production. Too often are the pillars decorated with cartoons and grotesque effects. We welcome the new poster as a harbinger of higher art.
