MONDAY, FEBRUARY 13, 1905.

Examinations are over. But, though the tension is removed, the atmosphere remains and the after-effects of the crisis of the college year are noticeable in the almost uncontrollable spirit of curiosity to learn "the verdict." This statement, however, requires qualification. The student body may be divided into two classes: those who patiently await the official notice—and there are a large number, and those who, in their anxiety, break the spirit, if not the letter of Undergraduate Association regulations. When the Association voted a petition for the abolishment of the posting of grades, there was a tacit understanding that the students would abide by whatever system the Faculty should establish. This, then, should mean an acceptance of the delay which is caused by the extra work of sending out individual notifications from the Registrar's office.

Curiosity concerning one's marks is, indeed, a natural and excusable feeling, but it should be controlled. There are instructors who voluntarily give out the marks, and there are those who let it be understood that questions will not be amiss. There surely is no objection to be raised against the discussion of a student's standing with these instructions. Unhappily, from the student point of view, not all the professors can be classed with those just mentioned. Many decline to give out any report and, in so doing, they are upheld by the system as conceived and first put in execution by the Faculty. It is to be regretted that a professor's attitude in this matter should be so disregarded that he should find it necessary to place a placard on his office door, announcing that "No marks will be given out in courses X and Y."

No one, we think, desires a return to the public posting of marks. Let us, then, endeavor to abide by our tacit agreement with the Faculty, and await, with what fortitude we can muster, the official notification of the result of the mid-year examinations.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE BULLETIN:

Now that the distractions of mid-year examinations are past, I would like to call the attention of the girls toward basketball. There seems to be very little enthusiasm about it and it looks as though its importance is not exactly appreciated. There are not many things which bring Barnard before the girls of preparatory schools, and it is rather unfortunate that one of the ways in which it can be done is so sorely neglected. When Barnard has games here with other teams a number of spectators usually come with the visiting team. If we can give them a good game and a pleasant time it is bound to have some influence on the girls and make them think, as we all do, that Barnard is a pretty nice place. Many people have, more or less, the idea that there is no college life here, and that all we do is "grind." Basketball is one way to persuade them to the contrary.

But, how can we have any games when no one is willing to give any time to practice? There are a few, but a very few, who have come down faithfully, but often there are not even enough to obtain a little team work, let alone regular practice. Where is our class or our college spirit, when the girls are not willing to give even one afternoon a week to basketball, and only two hours of the afternoon at that?

The basketball committee has been criticized for not getting more games scheduled, but what is the use of getting games when we cannot be sure of a team? Would it be an interesting game to watch when a team that has practiced together through the winter is matched against a team put together at the last moment, the members of which probably have not played together once a month? No wonder Barnard wins no games when such a state of affairs exists. We have had to cancel out of one game already, simply because of lack of practice and lack of players.

The least we need is enough girls to have two teams on the floor at once, so that five girls can get used to playing together. But even that is not satisfactory, as the more there are to choose from the better the team will be. Moreover, no team is picked permanently, and even if a girl does not play in the first game, there is no reason why, if she practices faithfully, she should not be able to play on the team later.

As most of the girls know, Miss Alsberg, '02, has volunteered to come up once a week to coach us. This sacrifice of her time is sincerely appreciated, I know, but do the girls realize what a lesson in college spirit and loyalty a girl who graduated three years ago, is teaching us here in college? Then, too, when she is willing to devote one afternoon, and sometimes two, a week to helping us out, it is unfair to her to come up here and find no one down for practice. It is discouraging, both for her and for those who are trying to keep basketball from dying out altogether.

All work and no play makes Jill a dull girl, so may I ask that all who can, come down at least once a week for regular practice. If they do, I am sure that before long Barnard will have a team of which she may be proud.
