THE PEACE CONFERENCE

On Tuesday, April 16, the college assembled in chapel to hear an address by Mrs. Henrotin, one of the speakers at the Peace Conference. Despite some attempt to make the occasion impressive by enjoining all undergraduates to wear white dresses with caps and gowns, and to march down with their respective classes, the lines were so straggling and the singing so poor that no very striking effect was produced.

However, after Mrs. Henrotin, introduced by Dr. Maltby, began to speak, all such externals were forgotten. The tremendous earnestness of the speaker, her very evident devotion to the cause she was advocating, could not fail of impressing the students. She traced briefly the relation of woman to the cause of peace throughout the centuries, contrasting the attitude of the ancient Roman mother, who buckled on her son's shield, adjuring him to come home with it or on it; with the modern mother, who pales and clings to her loved ones at the time of war, praying only that peace may be granted and they spared to her. Even as late as the Civil War, said Mrs. Henrotin, the too martial idea was still cherished by women—the revolution has come within the last fifty years. And she concluded by exhorting the new generation, the college women in particular, to carry on the work begun by her and others, like her, to spread abroad and strengthen the doctrine of peace.

The same evening the Peace Conference held its university meeting at Carnegie Hall. The three delegates sent from Barnard were Juliet Points (1907), Marguerite Newland (1908), and Eleanor Gay (1909). President Butler presided. The speakers of the evening were Dr. Rhys, of Cambridge; Dr. Roberts, of Oxford; Professor Adler (whose appointment to the Roosevelt professorship in Berlin was announced for the first time); Dr. Findley, of C. C. N. Y.; Miss Jane Addams, of Hull House, Boston, and Rev. Edwin Mead, of Old South Church, Chicago. All the speakers laid great stress on the importance of the universities in fostering the peace movement. As Prof. Adler put it, the universities should stand for sober secondthought. In times of popular agitation they should turn the tide in favor of peace. Moreover, they should do away with the feeling of antipathy to anything alien in speech, custom, dress—a feeling which prevails among the uneducated and is so often a cause of war.

Various other remedies were suggested, such as sermons from the pulpit in peace times, etc. The speeches were varied by songs from the Yale and Columbia Glee Clubs, which proved a very pleasant feature. On the whole, the immense gathering in Carnegie Hall felt well paid for its presence there, and the university students went away with something to think about.

LA SOCIETE FRANCAISE DE L'UNIVERSITE COLUMBIA

On the evenings of March 16 and 17, and on the afternoon of March 17, in Brinkerhoff Theater, La Société Française of Columbia presented Labiche's "Le Voyage de Monsieur Perrichon." They were assisted by some of the members of the Barnard Society. The cast was:

Perrichon ..... M. H. C. Olinger
Le Commandant Mathien, M. R. L. Roeder
Majorin ..... M. A. A. Wickenden
Armand Desroches,

M. A. M. Cohn Macmaster
Daniel Savary ..... M. G. Rocour
Joseph, domestique du Commandant,
M. A. H. Otis
Jean, domestique de Perrichon,

M. R. F. Bach
Madame Perrichon.... Mlle. McLaughlin
Mademoiselle Perrichon .... Mlle. De Boer
Un Guide..... M. C. B. Spencer
Un Employé de Chenin de Fer, M. Loenig
Commissionnaires, Voyageurs.

Though the play was far from being a very finished performance, it was on the whole creditably acted. The interpretations of their rôles by Mr. Olinger and Mr. Roeder are especially entitled to praise. Miss McLaughlin acted her part with great vivacity and spoke her lines very successfully with regard both to delivery and accent. Miss De Boer's becoming costume added greatly to the harmony of the scenery, which was, by the way, effectively arranged. The chief adverse criticism that could be made lay in the fact that there seemed to have been comparatively little attention given to stage business, so that when the characters were not speaking their individual action came rather to a halt.

The play seemed to please the audience very well, especially at the evening performances. The Columbia Society courteously reserved seats for Barnard students, who were present as guests. That Society also defrayed the entire expense incurred by the show. Dancing followed the close of the play both evenings.

THE STUDENTS' EXCHANGE

May Ingalls, 1909, has been appointed manager of the Students' Exchange, to take the place of Dorothea Elezner, 1908, who resigned the office last month.

MR. BRYAN'S ADDRESS

William Jennings Bryan gave a very interesting address in the Horace Mann auditorium on Tuesday, April 16th, before the school and a large number of university students.

While Mr. Bryan's speech was especially adapted to the young people of his audience, it was greatly appreciated by all. He began by saying that he believed that a good speaker would leave only one thought with his hearers, but since it had been 47 years before he had been able to speak before them, and as he did not know when he would have the opportunity again, he would give them four thoughts. He then went on to give a short review of the aims and work of the Peace Conference.

His second topic was public speaking, and in this connection he recalled several humorous letters from young would-be orators. His advice to all such was to know their subject, to have something vital to say on the subject, and to present the same with clear, logical arguments. In this connection he told the suggestive story of Cicero and Demosthenes. An old writer says of their oratory: "When we hear Cicero we say 'How well Cicero speaks,' but when we hear Demosthenes we say, 'Up, let us go against Philip!'" A good speaker must leave with his hearers, not himself, but his subject.

Mr. Bryan then spoke of the purpose which must underlie all true education. We must fit ourselves, by thorough preparation, for service in this great country of ours. He said he thought all children in the United States and in the whole world ought to have an education, no matter what their station in life.

His last topic was faith. We can do nothing without faith in God, in ourselves and in our fellow-men, and it is only through faith that we can initiate great movements, trusting that they will come to fruition after us.

Mr. Bryan's many and well-chosen anecdotes and jokes gave a spice to the talk which his hearers will long remember.

Dr. Otto Hotzsch, of the Royal Academy of Posen, who is visiting this country as the guest of the Germanistic Society of America, will speak on "Bismarck" on April 25th at Columbia. The lecture will be delivered in Room 306, Havemeyer Hall.

DEPARTMENT OF ROMANCE LANGUAGES AND LITERATURES

BARNARD BULLETIN,

Barnard College, Columbia Univ., N. Y.,
 Broadway and 119th Street.

WEDNESDAY, APRIL 24, 1907

Whether or not the college as a whole theoretically deplors the idea of dissolving the Barnard Union, appears to make very little difference. The facts of the case too decidedly point that way. An important business meeting of the Union is called and dissolution has been talked about for the two weeks or more preceding. All members who ever think of the Union at all know that its fate will be at least discussed at this meeting. What is the result? There is not even a quorum. At a meeting of the executive committee a few days later (for some reason or other almost all the members of the committee are present!) it is decided that the ideal for the future of the small societies and clubs at Barnard would be a loose federation by which there might be some attempt at system in the holding of meetings and delivering of lectures. As a first step in realizing this plan it is proposed to have a meeting of all the presidents of the clubs, together with the president and graduate vice-president of the Union and the president of the Undergraduate Association. A very good idea, is it not? The notice is sent to all, telling them what is to be the business of the meeting. And what is the result of that? The Barnard Union officers are the only ones who put in an appearance!

Can there be much question whether or not the Union shall dissolve? It seems to us to be more than practically dissolved already. Has there been any evidence within the last two or three months, except that one executive committee meeting, of anything which can be definitely pointed to as "This is the Barnard Union?"

THE DEBATES

The second of the trial debates now going on took place on Thursday, the 18th. The subject was: Resolved, That the Barnard Union should be dissolved. The speakers for the affirmative were Marion Crowell, 1908; Florence Wolff, 1908; Marion Gibson, 1910. Those for the negative, Gertrude Cannon, 1907; Gertrude Stein, 1908; Vera Kupfer, 1909.

The speakers on the affirmative based their arguments on the failure of the Barnard Union. Proof that the Union has not succeeded in "furthering the development of literary and forensic activity" among the students is the small support which it gets from them in its open meetings, in its debates and financially. We have been ashamed of the thin audiences which can be persuaded to attend the lectures of the good speakers who have addressed the Barnard Union. In the present prize debates, the audiences average from 15 to 20 in number, and it has been very hard indeed to induce girls to debate. Only 14 out of the whole undergraduate body are taking part in these debates even now with the stimulus of a prize. Such want of support argues a lack of interest in the purposes for which the Barnard Union was formed. Since this lack of interest is due to peculiar conditions in Barnard, in particular the heterogeneous nature of the undergraduate body, the necessary interest cannot be forced, and the Union is not needed. Further, to keep up a body which is such a failure must be detrimental to the college. In short, the Barnard Union was held by the affirmative to be impracticable.

The speakers for the negative urged that the Barnard Union should be given a chance to regain the success which it had in the two years preceding this. They considered that the Barnard Bear, its offspring, was anything but a failure, and they held that in those directions in which the Union had failed improvement could be made. Limiting of the membership was suggested, and a championship in debating. What they emphasized was that it would be a disgrace for Barnard not to have a representative literary society and a debating society, as other colleges have. If there is at present little interest in these things among the students, then there is all the more need for the Barnard Union. "Noblesse oblige" may be said to sum up the stand of the speakers on the negative.

Professor Brewster acted as judge. Decision was made by the votes of the audience. Professor Brewster outlined the arguments which had been made by both sides, and showed the audience on what points their decision should rest. The affirmative won by a vote of 13 against 2 for the negative. Florence Wolff, 1908, was voted best speaker, and Gertrude Cannon, 1907, the second best.

THE BARNARD UNION

A meeting of the Barnard Union was held Friday, April 19th, at 12:30 to discuss the question of dissolving the Union. There was not a quorum present, but the constitution was laid aside, and the present body given the right to vote on all questions.

Professor Shotwell, the founder of the Union, addressed the meeting, telling the members why the Union was organized and what its purposes really were. As to the dissolution, he raised three objections: First, that the prize for the debating was donated by Miss Gill with the express purpose of keeping the interest in the Union alive, and should not be awarded if the Union was dissolved. But to refuse the prize now would be a difficult matter and easily misinterpreted by the kind donor. Second, it seems wrong for the class graduating from college before the establishment of the dormitory to dissolve the Union, because the introduction of real dormitory life will no doubt bring an entirely new tone into the social life of the college. To foster a stronger interest in a literary organization, the Faculty might be induced to grant a special hour for its meetings, instead of crowding the lunch hours and keeping commuters late in the afternoon. Finally, although the Union has been a failure, its dissolution would be a disgrace to the college, for the college has need of a society which should lift others—and there are many who need lifting.

It was finally decided to elect four officers—president, vice-president, secretary-treasurer and editor of the Bear for the year 1907-1908 with the idea of reconsidering the reorganization in the fall under new conditions.

Mary Stuart Pullman, '93, was recently elected Alumna Trustee for the years 1907-09. The election was done by secret ballot. Nominations were mailed to the various members of the Alumnae Association, and their votes were also received through the mail.
