Co-ed Dorm Movement May Cause Revoked Parietals

The movement to establish co-ed dorms at Barnard and Columbia may, despite its unusual cautionness, cause a reconsideration of parietals by the Barnard administration. According to an officer at one Barnard dormitory such a reconsideration was discussed at a recent faculty-administration meeting because only one Barnard dormitory, has a constitution "616" and BHR are in the process of drawing up their constitutions. Without the document the residents may have parietals withdrawn at any time.

Such a withdrawal seemed unlikely a few days ago but as the co-ed dorm committee proceeds to put the 24 hour parietal to use as a means to transfer BHR into a co-ed dormitory likely some action by the administration seems probable. Mrs. Morosoff, resident counselor for BHR said on Sunday February 13 that she had no knowledge of any impending activities by Columbia here to integrate the Barnard dorm.

According to one spokesman for the co-ed dorm committee (a Columbia student) there is nothing the administration can do really if Barnard girls sign in the dorm with whom they trade rooms.

Most of the Barnard students whom Bulletin interviewed are convinced that the administration will take no disciplinary action if the girls sign in a co-ed dorm within the regulations of the parietal rules. The girls want to work within the regulations of Barnard's security, said one Columbia student.

A contact to Phil Black, one spokesman for the committee, no one would be moving into dormitories on the other side of the street until everything is satisfactory. Another spokesman for the group however insisted that after the first meeting held Feb. 13 several people intended to make out cards on that very night. In addition 50 people expressed their intention to sign, or non-sign.

Mr. Black said that the switches would not be carried out on an 11 o'clock basis. It would involve entire floors. Applications were distributed at the meeting so that interested students could have their names for a singles meet, unless. He said that he was a nurse by support for a red course drop to the fall. It has not really been made, and no very many Barnard students were aware of the movement.

Nelson Defends Medical Care Refuses To Discuss Drugs

By SYDNEY LADENHEIM
Dr. Marjorie J. Nelson, physician at Barnard, answered complaints about poor health service here by claiming in an interview with Bulletin last week that Barnard's medical care is "adequate insofar as it is used properly."

The doctor explained that most students do not receive the full benefits of her office's facilities because they "wait too long everything to the pill if you're on the pill they say — that must be it!" One girl claimed she has learned to "tell what the diagnosis will be: "It hurts above the neck it's your wisdom tooth. If it's below, you're pregnant. If it's neither, it's "in your mind!"

One senior recalled, "I lay rotting with mono for two weeks last year. When for they finally found out what it was, it was spring vacation and I had to go not married. Dr. Nelson disagreed. "We give out the Pill to those students who show us a note from their parents requesting it." Those who can't produce such a letter are "given recommendations or sent to Planned Parenthood." Dr. Nelson said that it is "against the law to treat anyone under 21 without permission of the parents, out side not explain why Planned Parenthood is free to do so or why the permissions parents give each year for general medical care for students does not include contraceptive medication. "I am leery about the Pill anyway," Dr. Nelson said, and "we have no facilities here for other kinds of contraception." She also said that "no one asked" her to hire a full time gynecologist but this would not be feasible anyway since "from what I know about gynecologists they are obstetricians too and would not find a large enough scope at Barnard."

Another frequent complaint about the medical office was expressed by a sophomore this way: "Regarding drugs, it doesn't think Marjorie knows what's going on. She should really get some specialist in there who knows about drugs, about 'ups' and 'downs' and things."

Dr. Nelson, though, refused to make any statement about the drug situation at Barnard, saying "All medical affairs are confidential." She also claimed that she had "no idea" how many students required medical care because of drug abuse.

Dr. Edward Kaufman, resident psychiatrist in the emergency room at St. Luke's, reported that Barnard girls "use every drug imaginable" and that approximately twenty girls per year are admitted to the emergency room for drug "accidents." Although he has come across "all kinds of cases," most girls to come in so that when they do they are really sick" and because they "won't take our recommendations to skip classes or report to the infirmary."

Most students, though, when asked about the medical care available, simply said, "It stinks." Others explained, "They are good for little things, like cuts. But for anything major, forget it," said one junior. Another said, "They attribute ev-home anyway." A sophomore who has been quite sick lately exclaimed angrily, "Every time I go in there they say, 'If it continues, you'd better go see your family doctor.' My God! What do I pay tuition for?"

Many students complain that the Barnard medical staff has not kept up with the times by not having a full-time gynecologist and by refusing to give contraceptives to students who are

Callender Scores Urban Center

By GLORIA WEINBERG

The Urban Center at Columbia is just another example of "a traditional way white liberals have dealt with things non-white" said Mrs. Lemoine Callender, assistant to the Dean of the Faculty and Director of Human Resources at Barnard in an interview last week.

In the past 400 years white institutions have addressed themselves to the needs of non-whites by simply setting up appendages on the side of the total and usual function of the institution.

As an example she gave the reaction of the Church which was designed to perpetuate a any meaningful change Mrs. Callender said. Even though many people on the Center's staff were serious about making good changes, they had no effect on University policy because of the way the Center was set up. While some decisions were made within the University on curriculum and faculty changes the Urban Center was not even consulted.

Part of the $10 million Ford Foundation grant to establish the Center was designed to set up a series of advisory departments related to urban studies. Although most of the money from the grant has already been spent the University has filed on one of the three chairs at it headed by Professor Charles V. Hamilton in the Political Science department. As for the two unfiled chairs the University will or will not fill them at its whim, said Mrs. Callender. "The Urban Center has no power in this matter."

The tragedy of the Center is that ideally it was a structure that could have had the instrument of change if there had been a campus commitment to understand the process of social restructuring. But instead it was kept as an appendage, powerless. If the University had been serious about making changes it would have let the people in the Urban Center participate in University policy-making Councils. Instead the University appointed a Vice President for Community Affairs without even consulting the Center staff.

I have to believe that if educated people and this campus is presumed to be run by educated people are acquainted with things that must be done to get black people and non-whites if they really want change. That this was not done by the Columbia administration shows that could have had a structure so closely following the traditional one put the center in a position where it was not able to effect particular kind of ethics for a particular kind of population when confronted with the need to "do something with non-whites it simply appended a bureau of black affairs to the existing institution. Similarly when industry felt a need to do something about blacks companies began to append bureaus headed by a Vice President for Special Markets.

The establishment of the Urban Center with a structure so closely following the traditional one put the center in a position where it was not able to effect the kitchen, and must be entertained in hostess's room only."

NO SUPERVISION? THEY MUST BE KIDDING!

The physical description of the Fairholm is never given in the envelope. No one would permit the hostesses to live here if this were done. But let us describe it anyway. The Fairholm is a single room occupancy apartment house which has been condemned for some time. The furniture is best described as early twentieth. Some rooms are painted, others are graced with peeling plaster. Light is provided by a bare bulb on the ceiling and in a small lamp. However, some rooms have only lamps — which may or may not be working. Sprinkler systems protrude from the base walls. (The walls are bare because there is a rule which forbids any pictures, posters, etc., next to the wall because this causes a lighter area under the picture and the building may not be "detected" in this way. The wood floors have reached an advanced state of corrosion and are a rich source of scratches. Bathrooms defy description. If you're alert, you might see a cockroach scurry across the floor. On second thought, you really don't have to be all that alert."

This year, an attempt was made by some Barnard Fairholm residents to persuade the authorities to modify the 11 p.m. restriction on visitors. The result was a survey asking us if we would be willing to pay $150.00 extra each year to have a guard post in at night.

Only Barnard students would pay this, not permanent residents. The authorities evidently neglected to realize that Fairholm does not have open doors. The outer door is locked at night, the inner door is always locked. It seems they're worried more about the guests we'd bring in than the danger we could every night when we stand outside on 121st street trying to get in the front door.

Dear Editors:

In her article "Is Tuition Rise Valid?" Miss Sullivan states that if Columbia College would "retire" their "facilities" this development would leave many Barnard departments severely depleted of instructional offerings.

I can not speak for other departments but I hope for her reputation as a responsible and informed journalist that Miss Sullivan's statements about them are founded than the one about Art History.

Assuming that "facilities," in Miss Sullivan's somewhat un-felicitous formulation, means courses offered by members of the Columbia College Art History department, I should like to state here briefly the facts.

This department at present has four (not three) full time teachers and two teaching assistants. In addition, courses are offered by five officers of Columbia University. Three of these officers are members of the Graduate School, one is from Barnard. In addition, there are courses offered by these teachers are Barnard courses and the instructors are paid for these courses by Barnard College. In addition, some Columbia College courses are open to Barnard students and most of Barnard College courses in art history are open to Columbia students.

If these Columbia University teachers (who enjoy teaching at Barnard for reasons highly complimentary to Barnard students) were ever presented by the various schools from which they came, to offer courses at Barnard, Barnard could use the extra money that now goes to these teachers to hire other instructors to take their place.

We do not think that anything like this will ever happen precisely because the relationship is one that is mutually helpful and satisfactory. We do, however, work on plans to cross-list more Columbia courses just as Columbia College will cross-list more of Barnard's offerings.

Miss Sullivan did not get all her facts wrong but she overlooked that all four full time members of the Barnard Art History department offer courses in the Graduate School. This personal evidence to prove that the Graduate School would not be happy if Barnard would ever withdraw these "facilities" from its offerings.

Sincerely yours,

Julius S. Held
Chairman

Editor's Note: Professor Held's assumption that "this development would leave many Barnard departments severely depleted of instructional offerings" is an inaccurate interpretation of the meaning of my article which reads, "Such a development would leave . . . Barnard seriously crippled in the amount and scope of the courses that the school may offer." Regardless of whether such a hypothetical development would mean a wound or a pinprick for any department, the assumption that Barnard overall depends a great deal upon Columbia College for its course offerings and that the degree of dependence is not a reciprocal one is still valid.

Women's Lib

February 12, 1970

To the Editor:

Dorothy Foltz's news analysis entitled "Women's Liberation on the Wrong Track" (Barnard Bulletin, Feb. 11, 1970) contains some un-factual and misleading statements which we feel should be corrected. First of all, contrary to Miss Foltz's statement, an article concerning our demand for a gynecologist at Barnard never appeared on the women's page of the New York Times. Second, let alone "reminded" to be our main concern and frustration," as she puts it.

But these instances of erroneous reporting are insignificant compared with the misleading impression that Miss Foltz gives of the aims of Women's Liberation. The issues under discussion at the February 5th meeting, the only Barnard Women's Lib meeting that Miss Foltz attended, were the repeal of New York abortion laws and our petitioning for a gynecologist at Barnard. Miss Foltz, however, was disappointed because the group did not discuss "the attitudes reflected by Barnard as an institution of our society and the discrimination awaiting women who plan a creative career upon graduation." We agree that this is a very vital area of women's lib; we have discussed such issues at previous meetings, and will undoubtedly discuss them again in the future. It seems unfair, therefore, for the Bulletin reporter to take the group to task simply because we did not discuss what she expected to hear in her presence.

Sorry, Wrong Number

By SYDNEY LADEHMEIM

A new Columbia Law student that we know has been pursued recently by phone callers asking for president Peterson. As the bulk of the phone calls have been coming at 7 a.m. while the hard working student is in bed, and as the callers are such earnest persons as state senators and the like, the fellow decided to find out what was at the bottom of all this.

It seems, he tells us, that Ma Bell & Co has given him a phone number that is still listed in the Columbia general directory as President Peterson's number. Meanwhile, president Peterson has moved on to bigger and better things, namely, an unlisted phone number. Alas, will our fair scholar get any sleep?

A message to Barnard Students from the financial Aid Office.
If you are not currently receiving financial aid from Barnard but think that you may be eligible next year as a result of the proposed tuition increase, you should secure application materials in the Office of Financial Aid, 110 Milbank Hall, as soon as possible.

If you are filing this application for the first time it must be completed and submitted by Friday, February 29.

Electron Microscopes For Science Depts.

Barnard has just completed the purchase of two electron microscopes for use in teaching and research. One is new, and cost $40,000, and the other was bought secondhand for $3,000 from Dupont Chemical Co.

The microscopes are meant primarily for the use of undergraduates in the cytology, microbiology, and animal behavior courses. Graduate students and those with individual projects may be given permission to use the microscopes, and some professors plan to use the instruments for private research.

A large part of the money for the microscopes came from the National Science Foundation's "Science Equipment Improvement Program." The microscopes are located on the tenth and twelfth floors of Alitchuk.

Theft and Vandalism Up at Barnard:

"... Now Become a Big Problem"

By SYDNEY LADENHEIM

The incidence and extent of damage by vandals and thieves has gone up considerably in the past three or four years, watchmen and custodians of Milbank, Barnard and Lehman Halls agreed in interviews with Bulletin last week.

Mr. John Kiessling, director of Buildings and Grounds, commented on these reports: "They're right. Vandalism was not much of a problem when I first came here." He explained that until recently most "breakage" was caused by youngsters from the outside, but that now "most of it is done by our own people inside the college."

Mr. Kiessling then cited numerous cases of stolen painted in red on the outer walls of buildings last spring, broken windows and smashed doors "in every building," and desks, tables and chairs ruined "all over." He added, "There is a lot more. There is much more."

Mr. Kiessling also explained that a great deal of damage was done in the Brooks-Hewitt-Reid complex this past year. "Columbia boys smashed the entrance door of Reid and pried open the grills to windows" in a recent party raid. Two of them were caught, though, and were turned over to the proper authorities. He also said that food machines in the basement of Hewitt were broken into by Barnard students. "The authorities know who they are but nothing was done," he claimed. "They were not apprehended."

Mrs. Morosoff, director of BHR, denied any knowledge, however, of this or any other damage. When told of the specific incidents by Bulletin, she maintained, "I don't know" and then explained that Barnard authorities "have never been able to catch anyone from either side of the street." Later in the interview, though, she admitted "I feel bad that people break and steal with such abandon." She refused, however, to specify further, explaining, "I don't want to give Bulletin material for such a story."

Miss Eleanor Smith of the Barnard Food Service was more open, however, perhaps because she has been having the biggest problems. She explained that silverware, cups, china and salt and pepper shakers had a habit of virtually "disappearing" from the dining room, and speculated that they were being taken by Barnard students to furnish their apartments.

Contact lenses are made of modern plastics which have entirely different characteristics than the tissues and fluids of the eye. Consequently your eye cannot handle this foreign object without help. So, in order to correct for Mother Nature's lack of foresight, you have to use lens solutions to make your contacts and your eyes compatible. There's a time when you needed two or more separate solutions to properly modify and care for your contacts, making them ready for your eyes. But now there's Lensine from the makers of Murine. Lensine, for contact comfort and convenience.

Lensine is the one solution for complete contact lens care. Just a drop or two of Lensine coats and lubricates your lens. This allows the lens to float more freely in the natural fluids of your eye. Why? Because Lensine is an "isotonic" solution, very much like your own tears. Lensine is compatible with the eyes.

Cleaning your contacts with Lensine retards the build-up of foreign deposits on the lenses.

And soaking your contacts in Lensine between wearing periods assures you of proper lens hygiene. You get a free soaking-storage case with individual lens compartments on the bottom of every bottle of Lensine.

It has been demonstrated that ammonia storage between wearings permits the growth of bacteria on the lenses. This is a sure cause of eye irritation and, in some cases, can endanger your vision. Bacteria cannot grow in Lensine because it's sterile, self-sanitizing, and antiseptic.

Let caring for your contacts be as convenient as wearing them. Get some Lensine... Mother's little helper.

Mother Nature never planned on contact lenses

Posts Contested in Undergrad Elections

President

LINDA GLYNNNE, '71

PATRICIA McGRATH, '71

The importance of the office of Undergrad president lies in its flexibility in meeting a variety of student needs at Harvard. Her service on and communication with the various committees at Harvard enables her to be an important link in the information network. She and the executive board must be constantly open to student opinion and serve as a body for discussion and action.

Having served on the executive board for the past year as a treasurer, I am well aware of the duties of not only an executive board member but of the president. I feel that I have experience with both the mundane and trivial jobs that need doing as well as the more important questions of policy and action. The recent open letter from the outgoing Undergrad officers to Miss Peterson, represents one of the more important functions of the executive board — the explanation of student opinion and a proposal for action. If elected I will do my best to initiate the proposals stated in the open letter for better medical and psychiatric services, drug education, especially for freshmen, more advisors for the freshman class, and a stated, written policy of the college to increase tuition only once for any class's four years in Harvard.

Having been one, I sympathize with the problems of the commutator and would work with the existing commutator committee to help alleviate those problems. It would be desirable for the commutator committee to aid in the search for more college housing, but I feel its most pressing concern is to encourage the admissions office to make known to all prospective students for real chances for the commutator to obtain housing.

In addition it is important to have an undergraduate constitution that would clearly state an order of priorities for college government, within a clearly defined Undergrad system as well as the emerging all-college committee system.

The fact that all these offices are contested this year indicates new interest among students in active participation in college affairs in a climate of heightened energy I would like to try to channel this energy in constructive directions and to prove that now, indeed, is the time for change and for meeting the challenges of change.

Barnard is composed of circles of people who many times have no connection whatsoever with one another. Even the geographical location of residence — commutator, dorm, off campus — underlines this division. Although the facilities of the city are close at hand, Barnard, a community within the city, has the obligation to offer its undergraduates the facilities necessary to satisfy basic educational, emotional, and recreational needs. If one circle of individuals finds its needs frustrated on campus and is consequently forced to seek relief elsewhere, then Barnard drops behind in her struggle for immediate.

The Barnard community, on the whole, I feel relies very little on Undergrad. In fact, many feel that its main function is to distribute money to various clubs. The value and function of Undergrad must be reassessed, especially in terms that will best cooperate with the proposed committee systems.

It is useless for one who does not have wide contact with different groups at Barnard to offer opinions and ideas that will shape administrative attitudes and policies. I feel that it is time for Undergrad to become the mouthpiece of circles of people other than those who have been interested only in the traditional, and in my opinion irrelevant, role of student government. This year the Undergrad constitution will be rewritten. It cannot be conservative. Barnard is a community of individuals as diverse as are the individuals of the greater city. It is time that Undergrad assumed the outlook of the majority of people it supposedly represents.

Vice President

ambitions. There must be a new delegate assembly set up so that all students, including members of minority groups, will have adequate representation.

Students should have a stronger voice in the set-up of classes and departments. Smaller classes, more seminars and fewer lectures are needed. The requirements, although they are already fairly flexible, need to be changed. Such requirements as the science lab, which serve the interest of the student, should be eliminated.

There should be more cooperation with Columbia on all levels. As a member of the Joint Cooperation Committee, this would be one of my primary goals.

Students should have a voice in the choosing of the Dean of Studies as well as being consulted when heads of departments are chosen and other decisions made which vitally concern them.

The housing situation is untenable. At a time when half the students are commuting and the other half live in sub-standard housing, the university should not consider an increased enrollment. More housing at Harvard is essential to become a primary goal of college policy and such anachronisms as the meal plan must be eliminated.

Any student who has had to deal with the bureaucracy in the offices of the deans and the registrar is aware that inefficiency is prevalent. Undergrad should exert influence by bringing about a restructuring of the offices directly concerning students, especially including the Committee on Instruction, so that there is more ease and flexibility in scheduling.

The inadequacies of the medical service need not be enumerated. In no way does it adequately serve either the physical or psychological needs of the students. Here, again, Undergrad's influence should be brought to bear to bring a change.

Vice President

JUDITH ZWIELSBACH, '71

Now is the key word for this generation of students and it is the key word especially here at Barnard. This school has undergone several important changes recently and now is the time to make the best of them.

For instance, our College Center has been in operation for six months; now and the Events Committee of McIntosh Street for almost a year. It has brought together the students and the faculty and, on occasion, the administration, for the modifications, the rules, the few initial errors have been made. Now is the time to set the pace for the future — to continue what we have now and to add plans which will further congenial relations between Barnard, Columbia, and the community. The discussions, both political and otherwise, and the social events that will take place in the Center will be able to provide the informal setting for a coherent Barnard community if they are directed by responsible people.

Formal machinery for a relevant student government has also been set up. For the first time in years, we have an active Rep Assembly over which the Vice-President presides. Now is the time for us to channel this enthusiasm into the programs for which the students have asked and thereby forward the trend of government by the students.

Now is the time to elect the leaders who are willing to work hard to see that the Barnard community continues to be aware of the flux of modern times and continues to respond to the challenge.

I have been active on both the Events Committee of McIntosh Center and the Student-Faculty Committee of that board, and I feel that I could be a satisfactory Vice-President. For example, but whether you vote for me or not (and I hope that you do), I would urge every Barnard woman to get involved and participate in the way that she feels is most suited to her personality and goals. Active students are what Barnard needs — anytime, but especially now.

unity the campus, a few specific may be cited. One is that Undergrad is the representative of the students, it should push for specific proposals which students want. For example, the hiring of a gynecologist in our Medical Office. A second case might be the sponsoring of certain new Tri-Partite Committees in coordination with the many diversified groups here on campus (such as the Experimental College), the Committee on Cooperation of the Women's Liberation). New Ideas and opinions from individuals as well as groups (commuters, residents, etc.) are constantly needed in order to keep Undergrad attune to campus sentiment.

Barnard with its unique position as a metropolitan campus with its own particular position as a small woman's college in a large multi-university, with its own problems of studying commuters and residents and with its problem of "bridging the Broadway Gap," requires a unifying student government. I envision the Undergrad Association as a device for effecting such unification.

JAN VINOLOUR, '72

In running for Vice President of Undergrad, I view Undergrad's function not only as allocating funds to various clubs and organizations, but also as trying to unify this campus. In certain ways the College Center has helped, as hopefully, will the new Tri-Partite Committees. As Systems Trust, I feel in order for Undergrad to be utilized properly, it must coordinate itself more with the committees of McIntosh Center and also with the various tri-partite committees.

Nelson Defends Medical Care

Dr. Cotton, chairman of psychiatry at St. Luke's, said that "the most trouble" for Barnard girls admitted to the regular, or "non-crisis" psychiatric clinic has been caused by LSD use, which is "much higher" this year than last.

the creation of the Urban Center as a permanent body was deliberate on the part of the University," she charged.

"It is my impression that the Center has produced no more than the University intended it to," continued Mrs. Callender. She questioned the ability of the University to adapt to social change. likening it to a patient with a terminal disease. "I feel that not much is expected of Columbia anymore because it has demonstrated the existence of serious gaps in its intentions to adapt to social change. Right now I'm not sure what the purpose of these buildings is — and neither are students."

According to Mrs. Callender, Barnard has many advantages over Columbia in adapting to social change. Our campus is less physically unwieldy, and the possibility of meaningful communication still exists here. "In terms of where we are addressing ourselves to social change imperatives, we are beginning to make a beginning."
